Dominant Performances in European Cup

Eisenhuttenstadt, Germany, June 17-18—No one was leaving victory to the final strides in the European Cup of Racewalking as all three races saw winners with decisive margins as they crossed the line. The men's 20 Km offered the closest finish, but Poland's Robert Korzeniowski still had about 50 meters in hand as he hit the tape in 1:18:29. The 1996 Olympic 50 Km champion continued to demonstrate his versatility as he bettered his personal record by 11 seconds. Second in this race two years ago, he left no doubt of his superiority this time. While the 50 remains his best event (he was also 1997 World Champion and ranked number one in 1996 and 1998), he has always been very competitive at 20 and ranked 5th and 6th in the world the last two years.

Second in the Euro Cup race was Germany's Andreas Erm who blistered his personal best by nearly 2 minutes. The effort left him well clear of Spain's Francisco Fernandez, whose third place finish led his country to the team title. There was no dominant team and Spain's 3:13-16 finish was good enough to edge Poland (1-7-27) by 3 points.

In the 50, Spain's 1993 World Champion and 1997 World Cup winner, Jesus Garcia, showed he is still a contender after a couple of off years. His 3:42:51 put him nearly 2 minutes clear of Yevgeniy Shmalyuk at the finish. The French completely dominated the team race as their trio finished within 31 seconds of each other in third, fourth, and fifth. Denis Langlois won the bronze in 3:47:38.

Olimpiada Ivanova, only fifth in the ultra-fast Russian championships race reported last month, was more than the rest of Europe could handle as she won the women's 20 Km by nearly a minute in 1:26:48. That would have been a world's best before the Russian Championship race a month ago. Italy's Elisabetta Perrone outlasted Norway's Kjersti Platzer for second in 1:27:42. The Italians were walk away winners of the team title with Erica Alfridi and Annarita Sidoti finishing fourth and fifth. And their fourth walker, Christina Pellino, was ninth, ahead of anyone else's second finisher. Romania, led by Norica Cimpean in sixth, was a distant second. The first seven finishers bettered 1:30.

That Russian race, and very fast men's 20 and 50 at the same time, have raised a lot of suspicion around the world as to course measurement and judging. This result would seem to lend some validity to those races with Ivanova within 40 seconds of her time there and beating everyone else so decisively. On the other hand, Tamara Kovalenko who had 1:25:49 for fourth in the Russian race, managed just 1:33:07 in 21st place here. Nadezha Ryashkina, sixth in the Russian race, did not finish. The results:

Rohl, Zenner Prevail At 15 Km

Elk Grove, Illinois, May 21—Mike Rohl and Jill Zenner were easy winners at the USATF National 15K Racewalk today. In the men's race, Rohl's 1:08:39 effort put him more than a mile ahead of runnerup Pablo Gomez. Zenner had a good 1:11:38 effort to beat Debbie Lawrence by nearly 4 minutes. However, we hasten to point out that Debbie was better than 5 minutes faster a week earlier on her way to 20 Km (see May ORW) and perhaps regarded this more as a training spin than a competition. Victoria Harazo followed Lawrence home and was the first master finisher, male or female. Following Richard McGuire's impressive 1:19:16, which led all master's males, there was a real dog-ding battle between three others, with Jim Carmona, the oldest of the trio, finally besting Max Walker by 7 seconds and Leon Jasonowski by 20 seconds in 1:22:21.

What the race may have lacked in elite competitors, it made up for in numbers as 45 athletes, male and female, toed the line, with 38 of them finishing. In addition, Lyn Brubaker reportedly continued after the finish of the 15 and did 20 km in 1:47:48, but she isn't listed in the 15 km results. One would assume she was around 1:20 at 15, which would have placed her fourth among the women.

Super 20 In Kenosha

Kenosha, Wis. June 3—On an ideal morning for racing, two more women added their names to the list U.S. athletes who have met the Olympic "A" standard for 20 Km (1:36:00, the time required for a nation to send three competitors to the Olympics). Sarah Armente and Jill Zenner brought the list to eight and Gretchen Fishman and Sara Standley just missed making it ten.

Rohl took the pace out fast and was nearly a half-minute ahead as she passed the first 5 in 23:02. Armente was in third, 38 seconds back. Over the next 5, Armente caught and edged away from Fishman and Standley, but made little dent on Zenner's lead as they went through 10 in 46:35 and 47:13. At 15 Km, Zenner still led by 27 seconds, but Armente was starting to close. She caught Jill at 17 km and the pair walked together until the final kilometer, when Armente proved too strong and went on to a 1:34:44 to 1:34:50 win. It moved them to fourth and fifth on the U.S. Al-Time list (see May ORW). Fishman and Standley also finished strongly and missed the A standard by just 26 and 39 seconds.

Adding their names to the list of Trials qualifiers (1:48 and under) were Samantha Cohen and Debbie Benton. Cohen went out fast to get a cushion for the later stages of the race, covering... the first 5 km in 25:32 and passing 10:52:04. She then slowed considerably, but hung on well enough to make her goal with 75 seconds to spare. Benton, on the other hand, knowing she needed 27 minute 5 km splits went out at that pace and stuck doggedly to it with 5 km splits of 26:56, 26:59, 26:59, and 26:47.

I could still go back and do that and wipe out all of this drivel, but what would be the fun in that.

Jefferson Perez, Olympic Champion

Ecuador's Jefferson Perez, who has been training at the ARCO Olympic Training Center in Chula Vista, will defend his Olympic 20 Km gold medal in Sydney. Jefferson has been the world's most consistent 20 Km walker over the last 5 years. Ranked number one in the world in 1996 off his Olympic triumph, he has followed that with number 2 ORW Rankings in 1997 and 1998 and a number four ranking last year. He was the 1997 World Cup winner and 1999 World Championship silver medalist. He seems primed for a solid competitive effort in defending his title with impressive wins in Bergen and Turku in May. Laura Arocheo and Polly Wright interviewed Jefferson for the April issue of the IAAF News. That interview follows.

In Atlanta, you won the first Olympic medal in any sport for your country. How did this make you feel?

Sometimes, sportmen or sportswomen only win, but other times they triumph. Winning the gold medal in Atlanta was a dream come true for me. Nevertheless, the reaction of the people in Ecuador, who were brought together because of that one single medal was the real triumph, for which I still thank God.

You were also the youngest ever Olympic walking champion?

Yes, it was the first time that a walker under the age of 25 had managed to win an Olympic gold. Having been the first made me feel particularly happy.

What were the repercussions for you personally coming home to Ecuador with Olympic gold?

In my country, people are very emotional. At that time, they would have given me everything they could possibly have afforded had that been necessary. But you know, time goes by and things change. People change and forget.

Do you feel that your victory in Atlanta made an impact on the people of your country and made racewalking more popular in Ecuador and in the South America region?

Yes, it made possible for the people in my country to watch the Games on television and understand what huge efforts athletes have to endure. The fact that Ecuador won the gold medal in Mexico the bronze at these Olympic Games helped us to show that we benefit from extraordinary natural resources—such as high altitude—here in South America. And that our natural resources ought to be exploited.

It is well known that after Atlanta you made a religious vow to walk 459 Km from Quito to your hometown of Cuenca. Could you explain why you ro for doing this?

When one has a dream, one has to wish for it with all one's heart and with all one's strength of soul. That way, all the energy in the universe stops in order to make the dream come true. This is possible thanks to God, the one and only Creator of the world. I am nothing more than an instrument of His will and desire. I train and prepare to the best of my ability in order to serve Him.

You are also the South American 20 Km record holder. Do you see any promising athletes who may soon be able to threaten your record?

At the moment, I don't know of any youngsters with such capacities. It is nevertheless, my desire that one day, a young athlete will come along who is able to better my mark. I would then know that somebody has trained better than I have and I would be happy to know that I have contributed to that.

Where was your passion for walking born?

Racewalking in Ecuador was almost unknown. Nevertheless, when I started walking, I felt there was a possibility for the event to go further. Racewalking is something that requires, in addition to

Canada's Mr. Olympics

The April-May 2000 issue of Athletics, Canada's track and field magazine had a feature on "Mr. and Mrs. Olympics", two athletes who had qualified for five Olympic Games. One of them is racewalker Alex Oakley, a fierce competitor I had the privilege of competing against. He often came "south" to compete in our national races. Here is the portion of their article featuring Alex.

Charmaine Crooks, a 400 and 800 meter runner, was the other featured athlete. (The April-May 2000 issue of Athletics, Canada's track and field magazine had a feature on "Mr. and Mrs. Olympics", two athletes who had qualified for five Olympic Games. One of them is racewalker Alex Oakley, a fierce competitor I had the privilege of competing against. He often came "south" to compete in our national races. Here is the portion of their article featuring Alex.)

Unlike today, athletes in the 1950s tended to leave the sport shortly after they graduated from university. Few athletes would have made their Olympic debut as late in life as Oakley did at the age of 28. (Ed. I think it was 30, since they list his birth year as 1926 and he first competed in the 1956 Olympics). But then again, Oakley was not your average athlete. For starters, he was part of the rare breed of athletes who competed in the racewalk. At a time when runners were considered strange, walkers were seen as down right bizarre. (Amen.) He lived a spartan life, trained with fierce determination, and had the longevity to compete in five Olympics over 20 years. Born in Newfoundland in 1926, Oakley moved to Ontario in search of work. While searching for work, he was introduced to racewalking by his brother-in-law, and soon came under the tutelage of Joseph Mahone. Oakley settled in Oshawa and began working for General Motors.

His first introduction to the Olympics ended in disappointment. In an event governed by strict rules defining legal form, the athletes are caught between the desire to walk faster and the necessity to retain their technique. Oakley fell afoul of the rules and was disqualified midway into the 20 Km. It would prove to be his only disqualification in an international career bridging three decades.

In an era where professional track and field was non-existent, the key to competing much beyond university lay in finding a sympathetic employer. This proved to be Oakley's advantage. While many of his competitors were struggling to mix work and training, General Motors was quick to accommodate his training and racing schedule. His job required that he deliver parts from one end of the enormous GM plant to the other. Day after day, he would walk up to 16 km while carrying parts, and then complete an additional 16 to 20 km after work.
The 1960 Games would prove to be his most successful. He doubled in the 20 and 50, finishing sixth and ninth, respectively. His finish was Canada's highest individual placing in the Games and earned him the honor of being named the top Canadian amateur athlete for the year.

Alex Oakley was not the type that would let this type of success go to his head. He continued his daily routine of hard training and simple living. His lifestyle shunned most of the luxuries that today's athletes take for granted. He frequently slept in the cab of his truck, raced in collared dress shirts, and spent his leisure time hunting in the back woods of Ontario or playing music for his friends. His mental toughness became legendary among his peers.

"He was the toughest competitor I ever raced," recalls Pat Farrell. "At about 25 miles you'd think he was dead, and then he'd surge back and overtake everyone."

It is this same toughness that would drive him to complete long training walks in bitterly cold winter conditions. His training partners were in awe when he persisted in finishing a 20 mile walk despite severe genital frostbite. Prior to the Montreal Olympic finals, he slipped in the shower and broke two ribs. Needless to say, this did not deter him.

Oakley would again complete the double in Tokyo in 1964. He struggled in the 20, but finished a solid 14th in the 50. No one could have been blamed had they thought that this would be the last Olympics for the 38-year-old athlete. By the time the Mexico Olympics arrived, Oakley's fitness had ebbed, and he decided not to contest a position on the team. It appeared his walking career was over.

To everyone's surprise, a pattern emerged that would repeat itself throughout the 70s. Oakley would grow tired of his retirement and his enthusiasm for training and racing would return. He would throw himself into an intense effort to drop the extra 20 to 30 pounds he had gained and return to his former state of fitness. Time and time again, however, he would soon be back racing like he was 20 years old.

At age 46, Oakley lined up in Munich to race 50 km. He place a respectable 21st in a time that was one of his career's fastest. The following year, the 47-year-old would record his fastest 20 km ever. It would seem that this man could defy the effects of aging.

The appeal of competing in front of the home crowds in Montreal was enough to entice Oakley into one more Olympics. By then, he was 50 years old, and more than twice the age of most of his competitors. As he entered the Olympic stadium, the crowds rose to their feet in a standing ovation. His final Games would end in a 35th place finish—not bad considering he raced with two broken ribs. Although he was well back in the field and 10 minutes off of his best time, he received the honor due a five-time Olympian.

After his final retirement from racing, he moved back home to Newfoundland. There he lives in the country near Witless Bay Line in a simple home without a telephone or hydro electricity. He still spends his leisure time hunting, playing music, and walking 8 km every day.

Even now, athletes across the country are busy training in hopes of earning the distinction of being Olympians. For most, it will be the highlight of their athletic careers. It will mark the achievement of something that they could only have dreamed of reaching. Crooks and Oakley have been so prolific in their Olympic participation that they make qualifying for the Games seem routine. For them, the title Olympian is insufficient. Perhaps Mr. and Ms. Olympics would better suit their accomplishments.

From Heel to Toe

Red faced. Last month we noted that the first renewal we received after raising our rates included a "$3.00 gift, which was reassuring. So how did we reward that faithful subscriber? We forgot to change his expiration date on the computer, and, consequently, sent him another renewal notice. Some gratitude, huh?... Olympic Trials. The women's 20 Km at the Olympic Trials in Sacramento on July 16 is shaping up as the most competitive racewalking trial in U.S. history, men or women. At last count, I see 26 women qualified to compete (under the 1:48 standard). The first eight have met the Olympic A standard of 1:36, so barring a real dark horse winning the race, we should avoid the fate of both the men's and women's marathons, where only the winner qualified for Sydney even though there were athletes who had met the A standard. The top 12 are less than six minutes apart in their qualifying times (from Michelle Rohl's 1:31:51 to Margaret Ditchburn's 1:37:35) and the last 10 less than 3 minutes apart, so even if we concede the race to Michelle (and I hope the other competitors are not doing so) the fight for other spots should be fierce. Rohl is certainly a strong favorite to win the race and, seemingly, would need an utter collapse to lose the title. Joanne Dow is well ahead of the rest on time (more than a minute with her 1:33:27), but has been fighting injury and may not be in that form come trials time. Her recent 23:02 for 5 Km shows she is at least back in form, but is she ready to hold up for a swift 20 in the heat? So she comes in as an unknown factor. Likewise, Yuling Chen. The 1992 Olympic 10 Km champion qualified in January with a 1:35:46. That was a 2 1/2 minute improvement on her 20 Km debut a year earlier. Those seem to be her only two serious races since coming to the U.S. six or seven years ago. We know she is a competitor—she has an Olympic gold—but where her preparation has taken her remains a bit of a mystery. So, two spots seem wide open. Debbi Lawrence has years of experience to go with her third fastest qualifying time (1:34:40) and she will certainly be prepared. But Susan Armenta (1:34:44), taking full advantage of her training at the Arcot Center, and Jill Zemmer (1:34:50) are right there and both showed great improvement and staying power in their last race. Will they be able to make the next step? And what about Sara Stevenson (1:35:22) who has come from nowhere to contention. Now that she knows what 20 Km is all about, will she make another big leap forward? Quite possible. Never to be discounted is Teresa Vaill (1:35:45), veteran of many international races and a fierce, if somewhat inconsistent, competitor. Those are the eight with an A standard—if they make the top three, they are on their way to Sydney. Nipping at their heels are Gretchen Fishman (1:36:26), veteran Sara Standley (1:36:39) with international experience, and ARCO Training Center athletes Danielle Kirk (1:36:46) and Margaret Ditchburn (1:37:35). But if any of these four are to make the team, they must not only finish in the top three, but also get under 1:36, either in the Trials or in some subsequent race. It should be exciting, but I'm not going to tell you how it's going to come out. The men's Trial is a different story entirely. No one has met the A standard (1:23:00) and the heat must not only finish in the top three, but also get under 1:36, either in the Trials or in some subsequent race. It should be exciting, but I'm not going to tell you how it's going to come out. The men's Trial is a different story entirely. No one has met the A standard (1:23:00) and the heat of Sacramento doesn't seem to be the place anyone will. So, there is a good chance we will be sending only one 20 Km walker—or none; I'm not sure if there is a scenario for that or not. The B standard (needed to send even one athlete) is 1:25:1 and only Curt Clausen, Tim Seaman, and Jonathan Matthews have met that—Andrew Hermann missed by 5 seconds in Spain last month. (I'm not sure what has been spelled out in the case that someone who has not met the B standard wins the Trial. Does the highest placing B standard qualifier go? What if none of them even finish the race?) Clausen is racing in the Trial but has said he will compete only at 50 in Sydney. Hermann is also on the 50 team and probably prefers that race for Sydney, so even if he should win the Trial and get under 1:25, he might also pass. Tim Seaman has been battling injuries, but showed he may be ready for the Trials with a 1:25:47 in Finland last month. Jonathan Matthews has kept a low profile since the 50 Km Trials. He will be 44 years old by the time of the Trials, which he discounts, but will he be able to duplicate his great effort in last year's Nationals when he met the A standard (but lost to Clausen and Seaman)? At this point, no one else seems poised to move under 1:25, particularly in the heat of Sacramento, or to challenge Tim Seaman if he is healthy. So assuming Clausen and Hermann are not interested in the 20, it appears to be a race between Tim Seaman and Jonathan Matthews for an Olympic berth. We have to go with Tim.

Russian Championships. As noted in our report on the European Cup in this issue, the performances at the Russian Championships, reported last month, raised a lot of eyebrows around the world. Many suggested that the course was obviously mismeasured. Bob Bowman queried...
Cheboksary, 600 km south of Moscow, and she took up marathon running. The friend knew what she was talking about. She was Valentina Yegorova, the Barcelona Olympic champion, who would also win silver in Atlanta. Ivanova started training with Yegorova, and soon she was running and winning marathons herself — three victories in 15 races — but none of the caliber of Prague, and certainly not in the time that she ran for victory. She won in 2:27:42, taking 4 minutes off her best, and putting her in line for an Olympic place in the Russian marathon squad alongside Yegorova, who is already selected. This performance came despite the refusal of U.S. immigration authorities to give her a visa to go for her usual winter training in Florida. She had made a mistake in her visa application. So she was confined to her home town, where temperatures can fall to minus 30 degrees Celsius in winter. On the other hand, Cheboksary is situated at 1000 meters altitude, and her elite group — three women under 2:30 for the marathon — pays a male friend, Sergey Smolin, to pace them in their fast runs. "He has run 2:23 for the marathon, so it is perfect for us. We also go to Sochi (on the Black Sea), where it is warmer, and to Kislavodsk, which is also at 1000 meters altitude. But that is a bit close to Cheboksary. So in fact, a cold winter turned out to be a recipe for a hot performance. Ivanova is one of four sub 2:28 women with credentials for the two remaining Olympic places, to be chosen in June. But her manager, Luis-Felipe Posso (Ed. probably not a hometown lad), says, "Whenever she has competed in international events, she has always run well, so I think she is very well respected by the federation as someone who can deliver. I'm sure she will be selected." (And she can lift her heart's content. Incidentally, speaking of unusual doubles, once did the 440 hurdle 1 mile double at the Ohio AAU meet, and a 440 hurdle, 2 mile steeplechase double at an all-comers meet. But then, as I recall, Willie Atterbury once did that latter double at the national championships.)

Racewalking representation? Poland's Robert Korzeniowski, Olympic 50 km champion and now Euro Cup 20 km champion, is one of 44 athletes up for election to eight spots on the International Olympic Committee's Athletics Commission. Voting will take place in the athletes' village in Sydney.

Looking Back

35 Years Ago (From the June 1965 ORW) — Art Mark covered 34 1/2 laps up and down a shopping center mallway to win the McKeensport (Pa.) "International" 20 Km in 1:38:06 with your editor 53 seconds back. Jack Blackburn finished in just over 1:40 and Don DeNoon was well back in fourth. (A memory of this race is that the center opened for business before the race was completed and Chuck Herman and other race officials were running around shouting at innocent people leaving shops to "Look out for the walkers." I felt more compassion for those people who only came to shop than I did for myself and the other competitors. Later, the national 20 was held several times at this shopping center and later a national 35 Km, but they had the good sense to move these races onto the parking lot, where the only problem in mid-summer was the blazing sun reflecting off the backstop of the shadeless course.)

Dean Rassmussen, fifth in the McKeensport race, won the National 50 in extreme heat, struggling through in 5:03:33. Bruce MacDonald, Elliott Denman, Paul Schell, and Goezt Klapper followed. The National 30 km in Los Angeles went of Ron Laird in 2:41:17 and Jack Mortland (yes, your editor) captured the National 10 km on the Stagg Field track in Chicago on another blazing hot day with a 48:19. Mark DeNoon, Rassmussen, Ron Daniel, and a sluggish Laird followed.

30 Years Ago (From the June 1970 ORW) — Dapper Dave Romansky dominated the news with wins in the National 10 and 20 and the Zinn Memorial 10, along with American records at 3 Km and 2 Miles. In the 20 at McKeensport, Dave pulled clear of Tom Dooley in the final 5 km on the hot blacktop to win in 1:35:35. Dooley had 1:36:04. No one else was close as Ron Kulik, Steve Hayden, Goezt Klapper and John Knifton rounded out the top six.

In the 10, Dave left Klapper behind and won in 34:44. In the 20, Dave left Klapper behind. The Walker Writers Association presented Dave with a plaque for his accomplishments. Dave Romansky was named Walker Writer of the Year.

The IAAF Office and received the following communique from Jane Boulter in the Competitions Office: "Sandro has asked me to inform you that we have just received from the Russian Federation a statement certifying the validity of the course measurement at the past Racewalking Russian Championships. The course complies to the IAAF and ARAF racewalking rules. As we noted, some Russian athletes who were part of those championships walked comparable times at the Euro Cup... Other Olympic teams. Australia has named Jane Saville, Berry Saxby-Junna, and Lisa Paolino to their women's 20 km team; Nick Athem, Nathan Deakes, and Dion Russell to the men's 20 km; and Deakes, Russell, and Deane Cousins to the 50. Four Irish walkers have met the A standard and will be going to Melbourne: Robert Heffernan at 20, Jamie Costin at 50, and Gillian O'Sullivan and Olive Loughnane in the women's 20... World Cup. Next year's World Cup of Racewalking was scheduled for Turin, Italy, May 19-20. However, this is now uncertain as the future Cups will be held in the fall of even-numbered years. Edmonton International. You will see on our schedule of races the Edmonton International on August 6. Here is how Canadian Roger Burrows describes it: "The Edmonton International Racewalk (EIRW) is what we in Canada call "Holly's Meet" after international walker Holly Gehrke, who got it going in 1996 (and is just starting to train again after the recent birth of her third son) This year, we've taken the meet out of beautiful Hawrelak Park in order to put it on the World Championship 2002 course. It is what we call an Associated Event for the World Championships—a chance for the World Championship staff and volunteers to get involved in a real-life competition. It won't be full "dress rehearsal" (that will be next year). But, for example, we'll all be able to see what northeast Edmonton looks like with some of the main streets closed down. The city authorities helping us will get a feel for the set up of a racewalk. We'll be able to embark on the serious, detailed planning for next year better informed. So, if you've ever wanted to know what it feels like to be Korzeniowski, Perez, or Sidoti driving for the Stadium with all the hounds of hell in pursuit, or you just feel like a spin on the course where the "big boys and girls" are going to be speeding along next year, here's your chance! Feel free to contact us, we'll tell you which bus to take. Who knows, we may ever be able to arrange for a display of the Northern Lights in the crystal air of one of our Alberta nights. Irish walker Pierce O'Callaghan provides the following item of interest with the comment "We've all heard the crap that walkers are failed runners. Well, read on... Prague, May 22—Athletes fans are used to multi-talented performers—sprinter/long jumpers, heptathletes, decathletes—but Alina Ivanova is rather different. She's a champion sprint-walker who graduated to being a top-class marathon runner with her success in Sunday's Prague International Marathon. Given that the longest Olympic walk, at 50 km, is further than the marathon, Ivanova's former specialty, the 10 km walk, virtually qualifies as a 'sprint'. She won that event in the IAAF World Championships in Tokyo in 1991. It looked as if she had won the Olympic title too, a year later. But half an hour after the event, the Barcelona judges disqualified her for 'lifting'. (Ed. Giving Yueming Chen her gold.) "I didn't want to walk any more after that. In fact, I only did one more racewalk, in Denmark, but I can't remember where," she said after the Prague victory. Instead, she took the advice of a friend from her home town of...
