PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

A hearty thank you to all who helped out at our annual Cleveland Track Classic. This meet was started in August, 1979, at CCC West and we hope to continue the tradition.

Congratulations to our national champions. To date, John Means, M80, has added five more titles to his credit. John earned three gold's at the National Senior Games and two gold's at National Masters.

We will need workers and throwers on September 22 at the Norm Bower Memorial Weight Pentathlon at Kent State. Please call Allen Ray if you can help out at this event.

We will also need workers as well as participants on September 30 at our fall Cross Country race. Please call Jeff Gerson if you can help out at this event.

We are still looking for meets. There are several meets left for the seniors (50+) group. There is still time to get a group together for the Potomac Valley Games. Keep up with your training!

Norm Bower was much loved as a friend and a competitor in the weight events. He was joyful, bright, easy going, with a wonderful sense of humor. He supported every thrower who competed in the weights, no matter the skill level. Our track meets and our lives are brighter, more fun because of Norm, and the Club wishes to remember him and his family with this annual weight pentathlon held in his honor.

Fitness Experts Place New Focus on Flexibility

America's fitness revolution began with an era of aerobics, when legions of runners and walkers laced up athletic shoes to exercise that most important of muscles -- the heart. Experts soon recognized that the body's other muscles deserved equal time, and the "iron age" of strength training began.

Today, aerobic activity and muscle strengthening continue to be encouraged for optimum health. But now that America's aging baby boomers find themselves grappling with stiffness, muscle aches and joint pains, a once-neglected component of fitness is taking the spotlight.

"Flexibility is a critical factor in achieving peak physical potential and preventing and treating injuries," says Mari Cyphers, a Northern California physical therapist. "But it is often overlooked or misused."

Proper stretching is one of the more helpful ways to relieve chronic pain, says Cyphers, who wrote the chapter on flexibility in the American Council on Exercise's manual for personal trainers. "If you don't stretch, in a world where most of us sit all day, your muscles get tight, which leads to pain."

For example, she says, "one of the main causes of back pain is tight hamstrings. Yet most people don't make the connection between tight muscles in their legs and pain in their back. Even some athletes pay little attention to their flexibility -- until they run into trouble."

Growing evidence of stretching's many benefits prompted the American College of Sports Medicine (ACSM) to add recommendations for flexibility exercises to its most recent guidelines for adult fitness. ACSM's experts advise doing flexibility exercises that stretch all the major muscle groups, a minimum of two to three days a week, to enhance performance, improve joint range of motion and help prevent injury.

Yoga and tai chi classes, which teach proper stretching techniques, continue to boom at health clubs and exercise studios around the country. And equipment manufacturers are http://health.yahoo.com/health/partner/ivillage/fitness_tip_4.html 7/18/01 creating devices -- with names like Flexmaster and Leg Stretcher -- designed to help people increase flexibility.

But devices aren't necessary, says Lawrence Golding, a professor of exercise physiology at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas (UNLV). "Most people can improve their flexibility vastly with simple stretching exercises," he says.

Contrary to popular belief, "you don't have to lose flexibility with age," says Golding, who has collected data on nearly 1,000 adults who have taken the exercise class he's taught since 1975 at UNLV. Over time, exercisers in his program showed slight age-related declines in strength and aerobic capacity, but not in flexibility.

Stretch before exercise. Warm up first with light movements, such as walking, then stretch gently to prepare for activity. Use rhythmic, easy motions that suit the activity you'll be doing, such as light golf swings or arm circles.

Stretch after exercise, when your muscles are warm and more receptive to deeper stretching. Focus on the muscle you are stretching and move your body until you feel a mild tension in that muscle. If you feel pain, you've stretched too far and need to back off. Breathe slowly and rhythmically while holding the stretch for at least 10 to 30 seconds, then release.

Don't bounce, hold your breath, strain or push a muscle too far.

Consider stretching gently while soaking in a hot tub, after a shower or whenever you get up from sitting or lying down.

Stretch daily. If time is limited, stretching all the major muscle groups (neck, shoulders, arms, chest, back, hips, groin, legs) two to three times a week will also provide significant benefits. At the very least, stretch for five minutes at the end of each exercise session.

Physical therapist Cyphers offers this easy stretch for the hamstrings: Lie on the floor by a doorway with one leg up on the wall and the other leg through the doorway. Scoot your buttocks toward the wall until you feel a stretch in the back of your thigh. As your leg muscles relax, scoot closer to the wall.
